4-H: An overview

For 787 youngsters in Appomattox County, really learning how to do something and then teaching others is a way to self-confidence and personal esteem. And that is what 4-H gives to more than 175,000 Virginia youngsters each year.

Youngsters, who can start in 4-H at about the age of nine, are introduced to a wide variety of activities including photography, business, bicycle safety, small engines, clothing and grooming, natural resources and much more. And it is a part of 4-H to take the information they learn and use it to teach others in demonstrations.

Youngsters in Appomattox County, said Kenneth E. Dawson, director of 4-H in Virginia, are introduced to 4-H either in a community group or in school. A community group is a bunch of neighborhood kids who get together in a home and begin to work on some project.

A school group is organized in much the same way, but meets in the school classroom either before or after regular school hours and usually involves a teacher as the club leader.

Youngsters in one of these groups will get involved in a project. Often the first one is "An Introduction to 4-H," an outline of what 4-H is. It explains the clover symbol; the meaning of the four H'-head, heart, hands and health: the pledges to the flag and 4-H; and the motto-"To Make the Best Better."

In these clubs youngsters get their first experiences in organizational practices. They run for office, vote and elect officers, and many get their first chance to practice leadership.

4-H is known for its projects. Some projects-learning experiences-are group efforts. A group just starting may make a bulletin board for the school classroom or for the home. 4-H'ers may choose from among the more than 130 projects available through the Virginia Cooperative Extension Office. If there is a special project in which members are interested they try to find someone who will volunteer to each them about it.

"These volunteers who teach the youngsters everything from clock repair to raising chickens are one of the most vital parts of the 4-H program," said Dawson.There are more than 10,000 volunteer 4-H leaders working with Virginia youngsters.

The projects are planned, learn-by-doing tasks, outlined and explained in a booklet, which the members get from Virginia Cooperative Extension agents or their volunteer leader.

The major kinds of projects are: animal, plant and soil science; creative and performing arts; leisure education and communications; economics, jobs and careers; environment and natural resources; health and safety; home and family resources; leadership, citizenship and community development; mechanical science and energy. Under each of these topics are specific projects.

The projects start from the elementary and introductory nature and progress, gradually, to the more complex to give the youngsters the background necessary to complete more and more sophisticated activities in the project.

"One of the speical features of 4-H is the demonstration," said Dawson. "Our typical youngster learns how to do something...bake bread, take a photograph, wire a lamp for electricity....then the youngster tells the others in the group how to do it....giving a practical demonstration, showing when possible."

This is a vital part of the youngsters' development, Dawson said. Once they get practice doing this, they develop a self-confidence that will help them in all their endeavors. The leaders and Extension agents truly work to help the youngsters reach this stage of development.

One way of helping them is to give them more experience as a leader. This is done in the teen-leader program. The teen-leaders will help with some of the 4-H groups and some projects so that they get the experience of leadership and enhance their own personal development too.

The teen leaders, along with the volunteer leaders, Extension agents, in some cases Extension specialists, and parents all work together in the 4-H program.

Another vital part of 4-H is the businesses, industries and individuals who financially support the activities. Many Virginia firms join national businesses to provide scholarship money which is awarded, at both the state and national level, to those who are outstanding in many of the projects. Scholarships at the national level are valued at $265,250.

4-H is primarily a local program, designed to provide learning experiences for youth ages 9 to 19. It is a part of Extension at Virginia Tech and Virginia State and is conducted jointly by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, state land-grant universities and local government with tremendous donor support.

Though locally oriented, 4-H has state, national and international ties.

Members get the opportunity to work towards competition on the state level. Every year the Club Congress is held on the Virginia Tech campus. Those who are outstanding on the state level continue to the national. National Congress is held in Chicago each year.

Through its IFYE program, members can live and study in another nation for a period of time ranging from two weeks to a year. Youths from other nations come and live with them. This past summer a group of youths from Japan lived in Virginia and next year, Virginians will go there.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 8, 1982, Ms. Williams from the Central Virginia VASAP program visited the 7th grade health classes at Appomattox Middle School. A film on teenage drinking was shown and it was very enlightening. Ms. Williams then led discussions about alcohol use and abuse that deals with teenager in everyday life.

Raider Review

By JANE GUILL

The first Wednesday of each month is club day at Appomattox County High School. On this day, clubs at ACHS meet during class time according to a schedule. Each period at least two different clubs are meeting. For example during first period the Future Farmers of America and the Science Club meet. Students are allowed to belong to a maximum of three clubs. There are fifteen clubs at ACHS and twenty-six club sponsors.

However, according to a recent survey completed at ACHS, on a scale of ten activities, being a member of a school interest club gives a student the least status.

The survey, which was conducted by Mrs. Maree McKay's sociology class, was completed by one fourth of the student body. The survey was a list of ten activities which could be rated on a scale of 1-4. A rating of 1 meant the activity gave a person high status. A rating of 2 meant the activity was important but not important enough to be rated 1. 3 meant the activity was accepted but didn't give much status, and a rating of 4 meant the activity gave no status or a negative rating.

After the results were compiled the survey proved to be very interesting. Number 1 and of course the activity that gives the most popularity is being a member of a sports team, such as football or basketball. Second in the survey was surprisingly attaining a high grade point average. Being selected the leader of an important school event was rated third in giving status. Participating in an individual sport such as track or tennis rated fourth in the survey.

Number 5 was being a member of a school publication. Being a member of the National Honor Society does not give a person much status, it was rated sixth. Participating in speech or drama activities was rated seventh. Number 8 in the survey was participating in student government. Participating in music activities, band and chorus was rated ninth, and as mentioned being a member of a club was number 10. Mrs. McKay commented, "As expected being a member of a sports team was number one, but I am pleased that attaining a high grade point average was ranked number two."

Of the 213 students surveyed 110 were seniors. The students who have been at ACHS the longest had the most input into a survey. There were 29 ninth graders, 25 tenth graders and 49 eleventh graders surveyed.

The survey certainly shows what is thought of as most important at ACHS.

Caldwell cited

David R. Caldwell of Appomattox has been named to the Dean's List at James Madison University for the fall semester of the 1981-82 academic year, according to a release from that university.

To qualify for the honor of being placed on the Dean's List, a student must have a grade-point average of at least 3.25 on a 4.0 scale, and carry a course load of at least 14 hours.

SACS Accreditation

Schools cited

The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, through its Commission on Elementary Schools, has awarded continuing accreditation to Appomattox Primary, Appomattox Elementary and Pamplin Elementary Schools by action taken during the Association's 86th Annual Meeting December 6-9, 1981.

Through accreditation, school staff and faculty members will benefit by knowing that conditions for teaching in accredited schools meet certain minimum standards and that efforts are continuously made to improve these conditions. Regional standards require adequate faculties and facilities and their effective use.

Citizens are assured of accountability and of value for their tax dollars through the process of standard setting and the regular reevaluation of SACS member institutions. Communities with accredited schools can be confident that their institutions compare favorably with others in the region. Accredited schools are a "plus" for those who are interested in relocating their families and businesses.

Founded in 1895, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools is one of six regional accrediting bodies in the United States. More than 11,000 member public and private universities, colleges, junior colleges, occupational institutions, secondary schools, middle schools, and elementary schools enroll approximately five million students.

4-H news

Mrs. Bryan's 6th grade class had a 4-H meeting. Our meeting began when Kathy White, our president asked Christy Doss and Chip Herndon to lead us in our pledges. Our recreation leaders lead us in the game, "7-Up." Next our secretary read the minutes from the last meeting.

Mrs. Walton talked to us about our old business, which was Public Speaking, pine seedlings, and popcorn money. Our new business was share the fun, strwaberry plants, and a new fun, cheap, Christmas ornament, crafts. She showed us how to make candy canes out of pipe cleaners. Bille Jones made out of a Christmas ribbon. She also gave us a recipe for a salt dough Christmas ornament.

Our time expired and Mrs. Walton had to leave, but we all could agree that was one of the best meetings we had ever had!

HERO meets

The Appomattox County High School HERO club met Wednesday, January 6, in the Occupational Foods Lab. The meeting was opened by Valarie Stevens, president, with the opening ceremony.

Mrs. Osie Mack, Extension Agent in Appomattox presented the program. Mrs. Mack showed a filmstrip entitled, "It's An Exciting Career: Home Economics In Business". The filmstrip showed the various careers in Home Economics that students can pursue after high school.

FHA discusses accidents

On January 6, 1982 the Appomattox County High School, Future Homemakers of America had its fifth meeting of the 81-82 school year. Our president, Jane Guill, opened the meeting followed by the reports of various officers.

The topic for the meeting was "Home Accidents". With 25,000 accidents causing death or serious injury to many households it is wise to put into practice safety measures for everyone. The film "The House of Accidents" was shown to reinforce how simple home accidents occur.

The meeting was then adjourned with the FHA members repeating the creed.
